People Were Driven to Desert to Die, Declares Returned DANDRUFF American Sergeant Who

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 6.—Sergt. Albert S. Mathieu, of 428 Ormond street, this city, who enlisted with the British army prior to the entrance of the United States, and who saw service in Egypt and the Holy Land, was with Gen. Allenby at the occupation of, Jerusalem, and the Allanta boy, who has just returned to his home, gives a graphic and highly interesting account of the con-ish army took possession of that country.

Sergt. Mathleu went over to England with Owen Cobb Holleran, who has written some of the most brilliant stories about the war, and Meredith Gray, another Atlanta boy, who was at one time on the Atlanta Journal.

"When the British army reached Jerusalem," said Sergeant Mathleu, we were looked upon by the people in that city as their deliverers. They were in dire need of the necessities of life, and great celebrations were held as the English forces took charge of the city. It meant food and other things they done without for months, and they were glad to see us come. The same was true of all the villages about Jerusalem." declared the sergeant, "and it would be difficult to picture the vast amount of suffering these poor people had undergone. After they had been stripped of all their worldly goods, the men and boys were impressed into military service and the women and children endured almost unbellevable agontes.

"The principal occupation of the na-dren endured almost unbelievable agonies.

"The principal occupation of the natives, Christians, is herding sheep and goats, olive and fruit growing, and to some extent, the raising of grain, but the herds had been killed off by the Turks, and the men had been taken away by the Moslems, leaving no one to make the necessary crops to feed the people. Conditions were pitiable in the extreme, and great numbers of refugees many of whom were children, starved to the Boint of complete prostration, were brought to the army for rations.

"Speaking of the cruelty of the Turks to Christians, Serge, Mathieu declared he had seen hundreds of children, whose little bodies had been horribly mutilated by the beastly Turks.

Cruelty of Turks.

Cruelty of Turks.

"Not cally did they starve, often driving them over the big waste placea without food or water, but they forced these children, in many cases, to witness the murder of their parents. In some places the Christian children would have their hands and arms and their eyes blown out by explosive contraptions that had been set by the turks. The children were afraid to touch a tin can, or even a string, fearing it would set off explosives. Imagine the terror of these little ones, hundreds of whose mothers and fathers had either been killed or driven away from them, living in mortal terror of infernal machines set about among articles they were expected to handle, and on top of this, think of their pitiful condition, when they were forced to go hungry, thirsty and naked through their great suffering.

"The people in America, who have good homes for their little ones, should be so grateful for the blessings and safety that are assured them, that they would not hesitate to shoulder the great obligation that rests upon them to ald the cruelly used natives of the Holy Land.

Mr. Mathicu described the operations in which he took part, beginning with the No. 7 light car patrol, which is omposed of Ford cars with Maxim, una mounted in the rear, which were used with great effect against the Turks.

Upon leaving this country for England to enlist, Sergt. Mathicu went via Savannah to New York, where he took a cattle boat, arriving with his companions in England aishort time afterward. Holleran and Gray went with the Dublin Fusilisers, while Mathicu joined the mechanical transport.
